Brief Description & Objectives
In this activity, children write their own books about a problem that they might have faced in their lives. This activity reinforces the concepts presented in the text and supports the development of their reading, writing, and speaking skills.

Grade Level(s)
K-6

Materials Needed
Story Map provided or any generic story map
Magazines (optional)
Book template provided or blank paper
Crayons, colored pencils, or markers
Stapler
Glue

Activities

- Remember Me? /¿Te acuerdas de mí? may be read to small children or read by older children. A discussion should take place about the book regarding Alzheimer's. This is a good time to introduce the concept of a story map. [Story map template is available from activity guide section of this web site www.raventreepress.com] Children can talk about the key components of a story map as a vehicle for discussing the book.
- The teacher explains that a story map is also a great tool to use when writing a book.
- Children are given their own story map forms to fill out in regard to a problem that they may have had and solved in their lives.
- After their story maps are completed, they begin writing their own books.
- Children may write a rough copy first, which is edited, then move on to their final copy. Teachers can explain that published authors go through the same process when they write.

- Children write their final copies on the paper from this activity or blank paper. When they have finished writing their "books", they may illustrate them with drawings or pictures that have been cut from magazines.
- Children will then create a cover for their books and a dedication page, if they choose to do so.
- Lastly, books may be presented to the class.
